TIP National Emotional First Aid Course

Health care professionals enter their profession with a strong desire to care for patients and their families. While advances in technology have made it possible to provide extraordinary care to patients who are physically injured, many health care professionals are frustrated by their inability to provide the care they would like to those who are emotionally traumatized.

The TIP National Emotional First Aid Course will provide health care professionals with the skills they need to meet the emotional needs of families and patients who are in crisis as a result of a death or serious injury.

The emotional first aid skills presented in this course are designed to be used by health care professionals who work in a fast paced environment and want to provide a “human touch” to their patient care.

“To be able to help the family after a death is very gratifying. You just can’t imagine how warm you can feel in your heart when you hear a relative say ‘Thank You.’”

Linda, R.N.

COURSE CONTENT

- When Tragedy Strikes: Why most family members of patients don’t receive the support they desperately need in emergency situations.
